

Prof Dr med. Klaus Linde is a physician and epidemiologist. He is research coordinator at the Institute of General Practice, Technische Universität München. He has long-standing experience in meta—analyses, randomized trials, observational studies and surveys in complementary and alternative therapies, and in general practice. In recent years he has developed an interest in qualitative methods and in the social and professional background of medical decisions in situations when no single correct solution is available.